

In recent decades, the global tourism industry has experienced unprecedented growth, transforming it into one of the world's largest and most dynamic sectors. However, this expansion has not come without consequences. The surge in tourism activities has led to environmental degradation, cultural erosion, and social inequality in many destinations worldwide. As travelers become increasingly aware of these issues and seek more responsible ways to explore the world, the concept of sustainable tourism has emerged as a crucial framework for ensuring the long-term viability of the industry.

The Global Sustainable Tourism Council (GSTC) is at the forefront of promoting sustainability in travel and tourism through the establishment and management of global standards known as the GSTC Criteria. These criteria, consisting of Destination Criteria for policy-makers and Industry Criteria for hotels and tour operators, serve as a common language for sustainability in the industry. Organized into four pillars—Sustainable management, Socioeconomic impacts, Cultural impacts, and Environmental impacts—the Criteria are adaptable to local conditions and supplemented by additional criteria specific to each destination and activity.

The vision of GSTC is for tourism to realize its potential as a force for social, cultural, and economic good, while minimizing negative environmental and social impacts. To achieve this vision, GSTC is committed to being a catalyst for change in sustainable travel and tourism, fostering knowledge, understanding, adoption, and demand for sustainable practices.

Through the development of international standards, providing assurance for sustainable tourism, making destinations more sustainable, and increasing knowledge, GSTC aims to drive positive change and ensure that tourism benefits communities and preserves natural and cultural heritage.
